The Story of Texas Wine

One of the oldest wine growing states in the nation, Texas got its start in wine production with Spanish missionaries making some of the first recorded wines in the 1650s in what is now El Paso. Modern-day production of Texas wine, however, started in the late 1970s, with significant strides made in the 1990s.

With about 4,000 acres under vine, the two primary grape growing appellations are the Texas Hill Country and Texas High Plains.

The second largest AVA in Texas, the Texas High Plains grows about 80 percent of the state's grapes. Its calcareous soil has rich red sand and clay over caliche – a terroir similar to that found in Coonawarra in Australia. Its vineyards can be found at elevations of 3,000 to more than 4,000 feet, with long sunny days and cool nights, providing a significant diurnal shift in temperatures. While at risk of late-spring freezes, many vineyards have invested in wind fans and other technologies to limit damage from these weather challenges.

The largest AVA in Texas and second largest in the country, the Texas Hill Country is home to beautiful rolling hills and pristine creeks, with elevations up to 2,100 feet. Its soils include limestone, granite, clay and sandstone.

While early wine grape growers planted international varieties, the industry over the past decade realized that Mediterranean varieties thrive in the Texas terroir. Now the industry is seeing great promise in white varieties such as Viognier, Vermentino, Trebbiano and Roussanne and red varieties that include Tempranillo, Tannat, Mourvèdre, Montepulciano, Aglianico, Grenache, Cinsault, among others.

A boutique winery near Comfort, Bending Branch Winery is known for intense wines – from the high acidity in Picpoul Blanc to the bold tannins in its Tannat. The winery uses innovative winemaking processes such as Cryo-Maceration and Thermoflash (the only unit in Texas) to improve color, structure and the taste of Texas red wines.

Dr. Robert W. Young, Winemaker

Robert W. Young, MD, is the owner-winemaker at Bending Branch Winery who completed the Winemaker Certification Program at the University of California-Davis. Bob's philosophy combines the old school art of winemaking with the latest science and technology to make the best wines.

BRENNAN
VINEYARDS

Brennan Vineyards is located in one of the oldest remaining homesteads in Texas, dating back to 1876. Its adjacent 33-acre estate vineyard, established in 2002, provides beautiful Syrah, Cabernet Sauvignon and Viognier fruit. The winery philosophy is based on taking a minimalist approach, blending Old World traditions with modern innovations. This approach is paying off. Brennan Vineyards was the first Texas winery to receive two double golds for Texas appellation wines at the San Francisco International Wine Competition. It also received the first-ever Texsom International Judge's Selection for 'Top Texas Red' and 'Top Texas White' in 2017.

Todd Webster, Winemaker

Todd Webster has been the Brennan Vineyards winemaker since 2010, where he learned his craft on the job as well as through the Texas Tech University and Washington State University viticulture programs. Todd's winemaking philosophy is "doing less is more," with a focus on getting the best quality fruit as possible.

Pedernales Cellars is Texas' premier boutique winery, specializing in Spanish and Rhone style wines. Its award-winning Texas Tempranillo and Viognier are benchmarks for these varieties in the state. The estate vineyard, Kuhlken Vineyards, was planted in Texas' oldest AVA, Bell Mountain, which lies within the Texas Hill Country AVA. The winery is devoted to sustainable practices and features the largest underground barrel cellar in Texas, kept at a steady 55-60 degrees by an environmentally friendly geothermal cooling system. Guests can tour the facility and then relax with a glass of wine on the tree-covered deck with breathtaking views of the Texas Hill Country.

David Kuhlken, Winemaker

David Kuhlken is a co-founder of Pedernales Cellars and has been the winemaker for the company since 2006. His first experience with the Texas wine industry came when his parents, Larry and Jeanine, planted the Kuhlken Vineyard north of Fredericksburg. He developed his winemaking style through collaboration with a number of local winemakers as well as training through the UC Davis Viticulture and Enology certification program.
